Building hope through system transformation

February 2016 Newsletter

Greetings!

I am incredibly pleased by the turnout we had at the Cincinnati "Paper Tigers" Screening and Discussion event on Tuesday evening, and wholeheartedly thank MindPeace and United Way of Greater Cincinnati for contributing to its success. Approximately 120 people came together to experience the story of how an alternative high school changed their approaches to working with troubled teens. Learning about the effects of ACEs (adverse childhood experiences) and implementing trauma-informed approaches was a game changer for the school staff and the students. It was not an easy road, but a truly rewarding one. Our attendees did some great discussion afterwards on how to make this a reality in our schools and in our community. The results of those discussions will be sent out to attendees and posted on our website. I am inspired all the time by what people are doing to help combat the effects of trauma and toxic stress on the lives of children as well as adults. Keep up the great work!
