

August/September 2016 Newsletter

Greetings!

As the incidence of community violence becomes more commonplace than any of us are comfortable with, it's important to check our responses and the responses of those around us for signs of post-traumatic stress. After the Orlando nightclub shooting this summer, a doctoral student at the University of Maryland compiled some online resources to assist others in understanding their reactions and caring for themselves and others. I happened to come across it after the more recent police shootings, but found the majority of it to be relevant to any sort of violent occurrence. You'll find it below. Please share it with others. This is one way we can all assist the community in becoming more trauma-aware and informed. Along these same lines, TTN is currently in the process of launching a new website page entitled "Resources" to be able to provide people with one spot to go to for numerous links to resources on trauma, toxic stress, and trauma-informed care. I know what we have now isn't an exhaustive list and I welcome your input on any of your favorite websites or videos. Thank you for your commitment to the prevention of and recovery from trauma and toxic stress in our community!

Membership

TTN Member agencies will soon be featured on a new "Members" page on our website. Anyone visiting this page will be able to click on your agency logo and be taken to your website for more information about your services. This will hopefully generate more support and/or referrals for you, in addition to letting others know that your agency is committed to trauma-informed care.
